Dry Stone Walls of New England

During the past two decades, New England has embraced the resurgence in the reconstruction of dry stone walls. Walls that had been hidden and forgotten have been rediscovered and given new life in the landscape. Where they had once held in livestock and marked a progression of agriculture and land use, they now stand proud as emblems of our stewardship in New England. Many millions of dollars have been spent in the restoration processes of these stalwart features. Still, little is known about the unique skill of dry stone walling. It has been called an "An Art", seemingly making it the province of the inspired or uniquely gifted. However, the 'Art' of the dry stone wall, or any other wall, is in choosing its style, placement and proportion in the landscape. The construction process is a craft and as such it can be taught and learnt.

Builder and educator, Chris Tracey, of Avant Gardens Inc will present 'Dry Stone Walls of New England', an interactive discussion and slide lecture on the form and function of dry stone walling. Join him and discover the past present and future of this land form enigma.

Join the MCH Board for round table discussion on upcoming programs designed just for MCH's! MCH credits? Take this opportunity to earn 1.5 re-certification credits for 2010!
